MILLIONAIRES BY GEOGRAPHY

Reuters

NEW YORK The ranks of millionaires in Asia for the first time surpassed Europe and in a few years are expected to overtake the U.S., according to the latest annual Merrill Lynch-Capgemini World Wealth Report. Here now, the breakdown.

MORE THAN HALF OF THE WORLD'S MILLIONAIRES LIVE IN THE FOLLOWING COUNTRIES (IN GREEN ON MAP TO RIGHT):

The ultra-rich

Noun. People with more than $30 million to invest, according to the Merrill Lynch-Capgemini World Wealth Report. There are about 103,000 people at this level, according to the report.

FALL INTO THE GAP

Merrill's report indicates that the gap between the very wealthy and the rest of the world continues to widen.

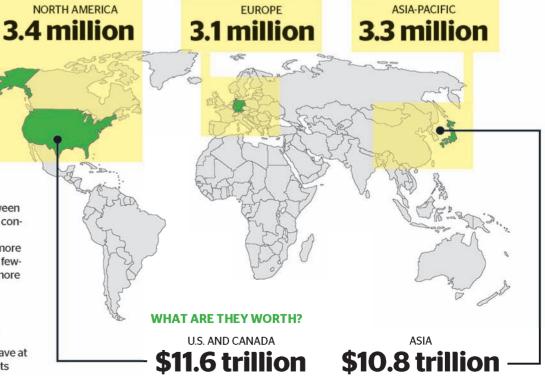

Even among millionaires, wealth grew more concentrated: The super-rich represented fewer than 1 percent of millionaires, yet held more than a third of that elite group's wealth.

Thank you, Guardian Angels

A BIG thank you to the Guardian Angels for teaching self-defense to our readers Wednesday night at the RedEye offices.

Won't you bee(s) my neighbor? My family bought a home in Oak Park three years ago. We moved there from the city for all the obvious reasons: the natural elements, from the vast beaches to the breathtaking mountains; the spirit of constant reinvention and creativity that pervades the place and its people; the multiple In-N-Out Burger locations.

Wait, that's Southern California. We moved to Oak Park because there was a good school and we wouldn't have to learn new street names.

Oh ... AND THERE WERE NO PEOPLE RAISING BEES IN THEIR BACKYARDS!

Apparently, though, that's all about to change. In blatant disregard for their future electability, Oak Park's village board members, writes Jim Jaworski in the Chicago Tribune, "tentatively moved to repeal the existing ban on beekeeping."

We can at least take comfort that the board "tentatively moved." The vote, though, was 6-1!

The Tribune didn't quote the one guy who voted nay, but I imagine him saying, "Well, I opposed lifting the ban because I am extremely allergic to bees. If one stings me, I will probably die."

To which I imagine the rest of the board saying, "Ooh, bummer. If only you had voted with us when we wanted to declare all of our houses to be Frank Lloyd Wrights."

The only possible explanation for the six board members' actions is that several beekeepers were in attendance at the meeting, their fingers beginning to lift the covers of their hives, mouthing, "Don't think we won't do it."

Now, Jaworski writes, the board will vote one final time, after it "work(s) out details, such as a notification requirement for

A notification requirement for neighbors? When you have to do the same thing required of child molesters, maybe it's not such a good idea in the first place.

(Note: I am NOT equating beekeepers with child molesters.) In their defense, according to the Tribune, proponents of repealing the ban say "residents should not fear honey bees because they are less aggressive than wasps and hornets and sting only when provoked or cornered."

But, um, they DO sting, right?

Yes they do.

And you can buy honey at every single grocery store? I believe you can, yes.

And you have a history of taking up hobbies and then kind of leaving them by the wayside, don't you?

I don't think that's ...

I present as evidence this half-finished model airplane, this neglected origami set, this ... OK, OK! I do, I do!

OBAMA PROMISES TO BRING HOME MORE THAN 30,000 TROOPS STATIONED IN AFGHANISTAN

MC

WASHINGTON President Obama announced plans Wednesday to pull 33,000 U.S. troops out of Afghanistan well before next year's election, signaling a rapid drawdown sure to please Americans weary of the nearly decadelong war and its costs.

The quick drawdown will be faster than military commanders had recommended. Instead, it reflects growing public pressure to get out of Afghanistan and to stop spending hundreds of billions of dollars on a faraway conflict at a time the U.S. government is grappling with record deficits.

"America, it is time to focus on nation building here at home," he said in a nationally televised prime-time address from the White House.

"The tide of war is receding. Fewer of our sons and daughters are serving in harm's way. We've ended our combat mission in Iraq, with 100,000 American troops already out of that country. And even as there will be dark days ahead in Afghanistan, the light of a secure peace can be seen in the distance. These long wars will come to a responsible end."

Obama said he will withdraw 10,000 troops by the end of this year, with another 23,000 out by September 2012—at the latest. Most will return to their home bases, the vast majority of those in the U.S.

That would end the surge of 33,000 troops he announced in December 2009, and leave about 68,000 U.S. troops there.

Obama will meet with NATO allies in May in Chicago to plot the final drawdown of those and other allied troops by 2014, when they hope Afghan forces will be able to guard against any comeback by al-Qaida terrorists or the Taliban regime that had protected them.

It's possible to draw down the troops now, he said, because the long war and surge of extra forces has achieved its goal: denying a haven to the al-Qaida terror network, which used Afghanistan as its base while planning its Sept. II, 2001, attacks on the U.S.

"We are starting this drawdown from a position of strength," Obama said. "Al-Qaida is under more pressure than at any time since 9/II. Together with the Pakistanis, we have taken out more than half of al-Qaida's leadership. And thanks to our intelligence professionals and Special Forces, we killed Osama bin Laden, the only leader that al-Qaida had ever known."

After weeks of internal debates, Obama settled on a middle-of-the-road approach between the military's recommendations of a slower drawdown and the push for a faster withdrawal coming from members of both major political parties, including Vice President Joe Biden and Sen. Richard Lugar (R-Ind.), a top member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Obama was given "a range of options," including some that would have drawn down the troops at a slower pace, according to a senior administration official who spoke on condition of anonymity as a matter of White House policy. "Some of those options would not have removed troops as fast as the president chose to do," he said.

Those options came from Army Gen. David Petraeus, but also apparently from others within the administration. Biden, for example, has been an advocate for a much smaller troop presence focused on countering terrorism, as Lugar proposes.

"The president's decision was fully within the range of options that were presented to him and has the full support of his national security team," the official added.

Administration officials stressed that the 33,000 troops could be withdrawn even faster, but left no room for a slower withdrawal.

"That will be no later than September. It could be before," one administration official said.

"There will be flexibility in the precise timing, but by next summer the full 33,000 troops associated with the surge will be out of Afghanistan."

War, by the numbers

President Obama unveiled on Wednesday his plan to start bringing U.S. troops home from Afghanistan, a first step toward ending a decade-long war that is increasingly unpopular.

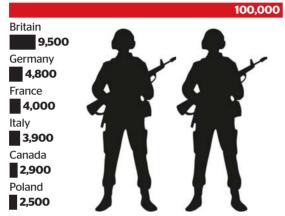

The U.S. is fighting alongside 47 NATO and non-NATO nations who plan to gradually transfer security responsibility to Afghan forces by the end of 2014. Here's a look at troop commitments from the main contributing nations in Afghanistan. REUTERS

THE UNITED STATES

- » With around 100.000 troops. the U.S. has by far the largest force in Afghanistan, almost three times as large as it was when President Obama took office in 2009.
- » In December 2009, Obama ordered an additional 30,000 troops, the last of whom arrived over the summer of 2010.
- » With at least 1,620 troops killed since the war started in 2001, the U.S. has also suffered the most casualties among the NATO members in Afghanistan.

Chicago picked to host NATO, G-8 next spring

Chicago Tribune

Chicago will play host to world leaders next spring during NATO and G-8 summits, giving Mayor Emanuel an opportunity to shine in the international spotlight but also a chance to stumble if the inevitable protests aren't handled well.

The new mayor's old job helped land the summits. Emanuel, the former White House chief of staff, began lobbying his old boss, President Obama, during their first face-toface meeting after the February election, a City Hall source said. During his inauguration last month, Emanuel bent Vice President Joe Biden's ear about awarding the events to Chicago.

Obama announced that his hometown will host the events during a speech Wednesday night in which he detailed a timetable for withdrawal of thousands of U.S. troops from Afghanistan. The NATO summit will deal with issues related to Afghan war policies.

Chicago will be the first American city other than Washington to host a NATO gathering. The summit, May 15-22, will coincide with a meeting of the Group of Eight industrialized nations as they convene to focus on

Perhaps the most infamous U.S. incident occurred in Seattle in 1999, when a protest against a World Trade Organization meeting devolved into widespread rioting.

About 35,000 protesters descended on the city, and police used tear gas and rubber bullets against crowds downtown in what became known as "The Battle of global economic issues.

It will be the first time since 1977 in London that the two organizations held meetings in the same city at the same time. The economic benefit to summit host cities is significant, which is why political advisers talked about whether to hold next year's events in two places-spreading the wealth to politically helpful states.

Cash-strapped Chicago will have constraints when it comes to security costs, said Emanuel, who intends to get private donors to supplement the city's resources.

Cubs join 'Better' campaign

Chicago Tribune

The Cubs are sending a message of support to lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender youths, becoming only the second professional sports team in the country to join the anti-bullying "It Gets Better" campaign.

"Hatred, intolerance and bigotry have no place in this world," Cubs pitcher Ryan Dempster says in a new video the team put together.

"The Chicago Cubs organization celebrates you for exactly who you are, gay or straight," manager Mike Quade says.

The video joins thousands of others posted on the itgetsbetter.org website, launched in 2010 by syndicated columnist Dan Savage and his husband, Terry Miller, as a response to the high rate of suicide among LGBT teens.

The San Francisco Giants were the first professional sports team to join the "It Gets Better" campaign, and several other Major League Baseball teams have signed up to produce similar videos.

This is another in a string of recent events in the world of sports that indicate changes in attitudes toward gays and lesbians. In May, Phoenix Suns CEO Rick Welts came out, saying he wanted people to talk more openly about homosexuality in men's team sports.

During the NBA playoffs, Bulls center Joakim Noah was loudly criticized and fined $50,000 by the league for using an anti-gay slur in an argument with a fan.

Anthony Martinez, executive director of The Civil Rights Agenda in Chicago, an LGBT advocacy group, said having Cubs players and coaches speak up for LGBT teens can have significant impact.

"I think this is an amazing display of support from the Chicago Cubs," Martinez said. "Sports teams and athletes in general can be such amazing and positive role models in a lot of ways in young children's lives. For an LGBT young person to see that support is very significant."

Aldermen balk at drug test idea

Chicago aldermen are balking at a proposal to impose random drug tests on all city employees as the American Civil Liberties Union raises questions about whether it would survive a court challenge.

A City Council committee that was scheduled to consider the drug test idea Wednesday canceled the meeting after the ACLU sent a letter to aldermen. The letter warned that courts have repeatedly struck down laws that require "suspicionless drug testing of government employees whose possible drug use raises no significant concerns." TRIBUNE

Vicious storm on 1st day of summer leaves wake of canceled flights, stalled trains, power outages

Chicago Tribune

Commonwealth Edison said Wednesday it would restore power to most of its customers by Thursday night, two days after a violent wave of storms that spawned at least two tornadoes and packed 80 mph winds at one point left about 400,000 customers without electricity throughout the Chicago area.

The majority of the outages were in the northern suburbs hardest hit by the storms, with about 137,000 customers without power. About 34,000 customers were without electricity in the near western suburbs, 18,000 in the south suburbs and 1,700 in Chicago. Some 241,000 had their electrical service restored Wednesday, and the utility expects to have 90 percent of all customers' power restored by midnight Thursday, ComEd spokeswoman Alicia Zatkowski said.

ComEd has 700 crews, including some 300 from utilities in neighboring states, working to restore power. More crews are expected to arrive from ComEd's sister utility Pico in Pennsylvania Thursday morning, Zatkowski said.

The outage is the worst since storms knocked out power to 310,000 ComEd customers June 23, 2010.

The storms spawned funnel clouds and tornado warnings. Based on damage patterns, tornadoes appear to have touched down in Downers Grove and Mount Prospect, according to the National Weather Service. Mount Prospect was hit by winds estimated at 90 to 100 mph.

The rough weather forced the cancellation of about 330 flights Tuesday night, stalled Metra trains on their tracks and left streets littered with tree limbs and debris. There were lingering transportation problems as well.

As of midafternoon Wednesday, airlines at O'Hare had canceled about 500 flights, and incoming and outgoing flights were experiencing 20-minute delays, according to the city's Department of Aviation. At Midway, there were about two dozen flights experiencing delays of up to 40 minutes, with minor cancellations.

The CTA suspended service on the Yellow Line and briefly did the same on the Purple Line due to ComEd issues affecting crossing gates.

Metra experienced delays of at least 5-10 minutes on inbound trains on the Union Pacific Northwest, Union Pacific West, Milwaukee District North and Milwaukee District West lines due to signal problems in the vicinity of Western Avenue. North Central Service line trains were 10-20 minutes behind.

Murder trial begins in stabbing of Logan Square street artist

But on Wednesday, the city had a darker role as the murder trial of the man accused in Scanlon's death, Kirk Tobolski, 27, got under way at the Cook County Criminal Courts Building.

Tobolski's attorney, Rick Beuke, painted Scanlon as the aggressor in a "classic Chicago street fight," a confusing series of drunken melees that began when Scanlon and a friend attacked a rival after a party June 14, 2008.

"This was a fight caused and instigated by people who were with the victim, and by the victim himself," Beuke told Judge Thomas Hennelly in his opening state-

Scanlon's friend, Joe Depre, testified that he saw Tobolski come up to Scanlon as he was on his back struggling to defend himself and swing his arm in a low arc into Scanlon's chest.

Depre did not see if anything was in Tobolski's hand and did not know at the time that his friend had been stabbed, he said.

Depre testified that Tobolski then threatened to "cut me too." He said he could see an "outline" of a switchblade in the front pocket of Tobolski's tight black pants.

Ticket to the Al Capone gun show? $110,000

LONDON A revolver belonging to notorious Chicago gangster Al Capone fetched $110,000 at London auction at Christie's on Wednesday.

It had been expected to sell for between $80,000 and $112,000.

The Colt .38 revolver was sold by a private collector, who provided an original personal letter from Madeleine Capone Morichetti, the widow of Al's brother

Ralph Capone, confirming that the gun "previously belonged to and was only used by Al Capone while he was alive."

Colt records indicate that the pistol was made in May 1929, just a few months after the famous St. Valentine's Day Massacre in Chicago when seven people were killed in a Prohibition-era clash between gangs including Capone's.

The buyer, who remained anonymous, was an online bidder.

N.D. residents rush to flee rising waters

Emergency sirens sounded in Minot, N.D., on Wednesday, telling up to 12,000 residents to evacuate immediately because the rising Souris River was about to overflow flood levees.

Officials hastened the evacuation of a quarter of North Dakota's fourth largest city after flood defenses began to fail.

"We are trying to patch up as many holes as we can to give people as much time as we possibly can to get them out safely," said Dean Lenertz, a Minot Fire Department captain and spokesman.

The Souris River at Minot is expected to smash the flood record set in 1881 by about 5 feet and reach up to nearly 8 feet higher than the 1969 flooding local residents have been using as a benchmark as they prepare to evacuate.

The National Guard identified "several areas of concern" in Minot and officials told residents to map out a direct route to head for higher ground when the warning sirens sounded.

Heavy rains over the past six weeks have swelled Canadian reservoirs in the Souris River basin, forcing unprecedented water releases. In turn, officials must release water from the Lake Darling Dam above Minot at a rate more than double what the recently fortified protections can bear.

The National Weather Service said Minot residents "in the mandatory evacuation zones should be moving to higher ground" in a flash flood warning extending from Burlington, through Minot, Logan and Sawyer.

The flooding on the Souris River, which flows into the Red River basin, was the latest problem as flooding threatens communities from Montana to Missouri. The swelling Missouri River threatens the North Dakota capital of Bismarck, the South Dakota capital of Pierre and other communities for hundreds of miles downstream.

Rats? Sure. A dump? Yes, but Guillen also says it's 'one of the best'

White Sox 4

Chicago Tribune

Asked about Wrigley Field last week, White Sox manager Ozzie Guillen said he agreed with MLB Network analyst Peter Gammons' assessment that it's "a dump."

Seldom has Guillen had a kind word to say about playing on the North Side, and he seems to relish his reputation as an inveterate Wrigley basher.

When asked Wednesday on "Chicago Tribune Live" whether he's going to bring up the alleged rat problem once again and call Wrigley a dump when the White Sox come to the North Side for Round 2 of the City Series, Guillen replied: "Well, it is."

But Guillen suddenly turned serious, and began heaping some rare praise on Wrigley.

"When I talk about Wrigley Field, I don't talk about the Cubs fans, I don't talk about the players, I don't talk about the organization," Guillen said. "I talk about the building.

"There is not a better building to play in from the national anthem to the last out—not one better than that. The people, don't get me wrong, it's no good to work at. But as soon as the game starts, it's one of the best places I've ever managed or played at in my career."

On the opposite side, Cubs players enjoy the trip to the Cell, where they can take extra batting practice without walking to center field, and still get meal money despite eating lunch in their own kitchens.

Cubs reliever Jeff Samardzija visited the ballpark well before it became known as the Cell, and always enjoyed it as a fan.

"I came to Comiskey a bunch of times as a kid, and I love coming here," Samardzija said. "For me it's fun."

Cubs 3 Peavy, Pierzynski spat

Jake Peavy pointed to the mound after getting pulled in the midst of a sixthinning jam, and he and catcher A.J. Pierzynski had words in the tunnel leading to the White Sox's clubhouse after the inning ended.

Peavy was pulled after giving up a single to Jeff Baker that enabled the Cubs to cut the Sox's lead to 4-3. Baker's hit was the third consecutive hit allowed by Peavy, who was pulled after 104 pitches.

Peavy was about halfway off the mound when he pointed in the direction of the mound, where Pierzynski and several of his teammates were standing.

After the inning ended, the two had words in the dugout and headed up the tunnel. Pierzynski returned to the Sox's dugout with two out in the bottom of the sixth. TRIBUNE

So true, Alfonso

Breaking news: Alfonso Soriano said Chicago is one of the hardest towns to play in because of how we treat slumping sluggers.

Yeah, that's true. When you're paid millions and millions of dollars, when the rest of the country can barely pay their bills, when the city, state and country are broke, it's nice to know that the $15 million or so being floated to you gave to hit a basehall.

guys to hit a baseball out of the park is going to good use.

Don't complain, pal. You wanted it. You came here. You know what the deal is. There are really only a handful of towns in this country that still really, really care about baseball.

In Chicago, we boo. In other towns, they don't even show up. Ever ask yourself why there isn't a swimming pool at Wrigley Field? Because we don't need to bribe people with cheap gimmicks to come watch the games.

That goes for you too, Adam Done—still another 20 points shy of unwatchable. These guys have a great scam going here. It's the "I'll heat up when the weather heats up" excuse. Love it. Then here's an idea: Let's pro-rate the salary. The first two months you guys have been off, it's coming out of your paychecks. Thanks.

An exception: Paul Konerko. Been watching him for years. Two words: Quiet dignity. Someone find me another 24 just like him. His secret: He works at it. What a revelation. The rest of the country, take notice. If you want something, work at it.

Speaking of Ozzie Guillen, here we go again with the Florida Marlins. I'm already bored with this story. If you're going to go, go now. Yes, we'll miss your honesty and blah-blah-blah, but I won't miss the overall mediocrity since 2005. Thanks, man. And take your loud-mouth kids with you. Tweet that, my brother.

Dateline Chicago, home of the NFL meetings. We're close to a fair divvying up of the pie.

This pie, by the way, is bigger than most countries. Um, $18 billion a year by 2016 — $18 billion. See, we're not broke.

Lockout to lockdown

Mannings play cops as NFL work stoppage forces them, others to amuse themselves

RedEye

Stop the NFL lockout. Please.

Players have so much time on their hands, they're doing some pretty ridiculous things.

On Wednesday, N.Y. Giants quarterback Eli Manning killed a man after hitting him in square in the chest with a football. A bit later, Indianapolis Colts quarterback Peyton Manning did the same thing after he hit a man's hand with a football, causing him to drop his cigar and light himself on fire.

And there's video proof. Seriously.

The Mannings are working on a TV series with DirectTV called "Football Cops," and their violent shenanigans were all a part of the show. A trailer can be found at redeye sportsguy.tumblr.com. It's actually not Peyton plays Mike Tahoe; Eli is C.J. Hunter. They both sport porn 'staches as they stalk their perps' stashes.

While "Football Cops" is silly fun, the Mannings are still better suited throwing footballs on Sundays at guys who are not yet criminals.

Reggie Bush, meanwhile, prefers reality TV. He spent time in Danville, Ill., earlier this month with the family of Reggie Bush as part of a summer CBS series called "Same Name."

Bush, the running back, also made headlines Wednesday when Media Takeout reported his new girlfriend doesn't have the same name as Kim Kardashian, but she is a Kardashian look-alike/impersonator who has starred in Old Navy commercials. All together now, Google "Melissa Molinaro."

And don't even get us started on the summer of stupidity that has been Chad Ocho-

All this comes amid a report the NFL actually is making progress on a deal that would end the lockout.

It couldn't come soon enough.

There's been some silly talk recently about Chicago being a White Sox town. I like the men in black as much as the next average Joe, but this is Cubs country. For now. The Sox are making their move, though. They've got an overpaid slugger who strikes out as often as I lick my ... um, moving on. They've got a pitcher who seems to spend more time on the DL than the mound. Their pitchers and catchers have started arguing in the dugout. Those used to be the Cubs' calling cards. So congrats to the Sox.

IT'S 5 O'CLOCK SOMEWHERE, RIGHT?

5 spots to wind down when you're off duty

By Emily Van Zandt

After clocking out from your 9-5, 10-6 or noon-4:30 (they're out there), few things are more rewarding than the possibility of a cold beverage. Preferably of the alcohol-tinged variety. Between the Loop and River North there's a mile-long list of bars that fill up when 5 p.m. rolls around. The latest on that list? Paris Club's (59 W. Hubbard St.) new foray into roof-top lounging, Studio Paris, set to open this week. But if you can't seem to score a seat there, there's plenty going on just a few blocks away. See what's happening to draw crowds at these after-work destinations:

Angels & Kings

230 N. Michigan Ave. 312-334-6722

This sleek lounge in the Hard Rock Hotel just opened its sidewalk patio, and starting Monday, you can get in on a round of mingo (yes, that's mugshot bingo), marking out photos of musicians when you hear their song play. Win a round, get a free drink.

What to drink: AK is especially well-suited for those in need of a post-5 p.m. Take the Dirty Diana ($10) for example: apple, citrus, raspberry and orange flavored vodkas, plus Red Bull. Whoa.

When to go: Expect to see the bar getting an afterwork crowd starting around 5 p.m. weekdays. For people who choose to keep partying (and try to chat up some of the folks staying at the Hard Rock), the spot stays open until 2 a.m. weeknights.

100 S. Wacker Drive 312-546-6177

The latest offering from the team behind spots such as Sweetwater and the Boundary goes moves easily from business lunches in one of the restaurant's sleek booths to postdeal drinks at the shaded outdoor bar.

What to drink: No tropical umbrellas here. It's a straightforward list of beers, wine and dark spirits, including more than 50 brews.

When to go: Toward the end of the week, work crowds build as early as 3 p.m. (TGIF, right?), but Mondays through Wednesdays, people generally don't wander in until after 5 p.m. You can see the suit-and-tie crowd hanging out on South Branch's extensive patio until around 9 p.m. weekdays and until

Bodega No. 5

638 S. Michigan Ave. 312-765-0524

This tiny, everything-is-$5 cafe and bar inside Mercat a la Planxa serves up Spanish-inspired cocktails and bites.

What to drink: For summer, Bodega's $5 cocktails (small, but you won't feel cheated) are on the tropical side. Try the Cha Cha (a mix of vodka, mango and grapefruit), the Planxa (pineapple rum, cilantro, mint and lime) or the margarita, which features fresh lemon and lime juices.

When to go: Bodega is closed Sundays and Mondays and open only until 5 p.m. Tuesdays and Wednesdays, so stop by Thursdays and Fridays when it's open until 11 p.m. or later. The after-work crowd can be seen enjoying some Michigan Avenue people watching on the patio until 8:30 p.m. or so, when the buzz begins to die down.

midnight Fridays.

Vertigo Sky Lounge

2 W. Erie St. 312-202-6060

Check out the view high above Erie at this bar in the Dana Hotel. "Been there, seen that"? Vertigo recently renovated, adding 800 square feet and doubling its capacity.

What to drink: If you're stopping by on a Friday, catch the $6 Belvedere cocktail deal to save a little cash. Other refreshing rooftop options include the Pink Lady (gin, grenadine and a little cream) and the Honey Bee (rum, lime and, naturally, honey). When to go: The weeknight crowd follows the typical waves—the after-work crowd builds around 5 p.m. and starts to head out when the night crowd trickles in around 9 p.m. Fridays are another story, with the lounge opening at noon for the summer and people setting up shop as early as 1 or 2 p.m. (seriously, where do these people work?).

Bull & Bear

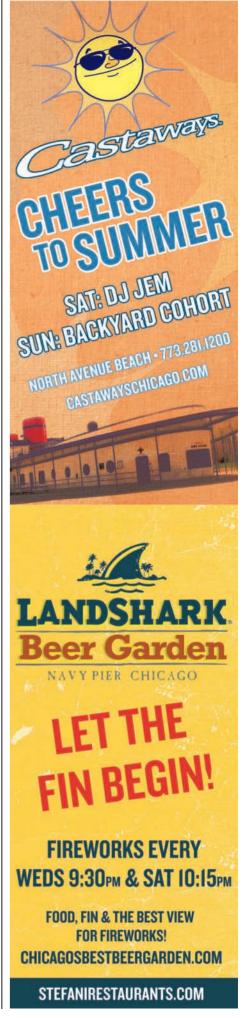

431 N. Wells St. 312-527-5973

This tried-and-true River North favorite is a go-to for beers and snacks after a busy day, especially if it's sunny enough to enjoy the wrap-around sidewalk patio along Wells and Hubbard.

What to drink: Go big or go home with personal (well, you'll want to split with the table) beer barrels that keep your favorite brew cold and at-the-ready at your table. Not in a beer mood? Opt for a sharable pitcher of red or white sangria.

When to go: Expect the after-workers to start grabbing tables around 4 p.m. or earlier on summer Fridays with those folks heading home between 8 and 9 p.m., leaving room for the next wave. If you're looking for a seat on the patio, get there early.

The opening of Stereo brought mobs of party people to Belmont Cragin on Thursday. The line outside snaked around the block, and inside, folks danced away the night to top 40 and vintage '90s Euro. It was like "A Night at the Roxbury" on Diversey. -craig seymour

Have you ever dated someone who couldn't pronounce your name? Not really. They do a pretty good job after three or four tries.

What are you drinking? I started out drinking

Polish beer, and right now I'm probably gonna go and get some vodka/7UP because that's what I usually drink.

What's better, Polish beer or American beer?

I like Polish beer because it's stronger. You don't have to drink four cases to get drunk. You just drink three or four and you're good.

What are you drinking?

Tequila sunrise. I love tequila. I like the bitter taste of it. I don't like drinks that are too sweet.

A lot of people here are from Poland. What's up with that?

It's a Polish neighborhood, and tonight's the opening of this new club.

Is Paulina a really common name in Poland?

When I was born, I didn't think it was that popular. But when I moved here to Chicago, I noticed a lot of Paulinas.

What's your favorite type of Any place with a good beer selection and food.

What's your favorite beer?

I don't know. But I've actually recorded every single beer I've had since October. I'm going to school for statistics.

You're wearing a tie. Can you really get loose at a club with a tie?

The top button is unbuttoned. You can get pretty loose if the top button's unbuttoned.

Emily Van Zandt evanzandt@ tribune.com

Are empty bars a turnoff?

"Seriously, Emily. Why do you keep bringing people to this bar?"
"Because there's never anyone here!"

[Blank stares.]

This is starting to become a problem.

Last week I realized it was the fourth or fifth time I'd recommended a certain Wrigleyville spot not because of the drinks (typical), service (sometimes drunken) or crowd (eclectic, I believe, is the polite word)—but because it's usually deserted until well into the night.

I thought I'd been doing everyone a favor by pointing out this delightfully underused Clark Street bar. It was a Thursday and I'm pretty sure the T-shirt I was wearing had a hole it—being seen clearly was not my first priority. Apparently my friends did not agree.

Call me lazy—or selectively antisocial—but when I go out, I'm usually not looking forward to standing in line or throwing elbows to get my hands on a cocktail.

I keep a mental list of spots I know will have space at the bar at any given time, and I've been known to veto runs to my favorite late-night bar if I know it's going to be one in, one out.

Try to explain this to my partners-in-consumption, and they think I'm nuts. After all, if no one's going, it must mean there's something wrong. Right?

Well, maybe. It could be just an off night. The crowd doesn't really build until after 2 a.m., you guys! Whatever the excuse, if a bar is clean, well-stocked and convenient, I'm not going to run out just because it's not asses-to-elbows.

It's not the go-to move, but if I'm looking to hang out with a few friends—especially on a weeknight—I have no problem being the only one taking up bar space.

So help me solve this debate: Am I crazy? Are empty bars a turnoff for every other 20-something in Chicago, or do they have a place?

Midnight melodies

Chicago indie-folksters Good Evening answered our Chi-Tunes questionnaire at metromix.com. Do the same and your band could appear in RedEye and Metromix!

What makes your live show great?

Good Evening plays with anywhere from two members (Alyssa Martinez and Weston Rose) to five members [including Davis Krieg], and each of us plays at least two instruments (well, David Rose plays about a dozen), so our band dynamic and sound are always shifting from show to show. And Alyssa tap dances at our live shows, which always turns heads.

Describe your sound in five words or less.

Midnight, broken-glass love songs.

Tell us something random about the band and why that's significant.

Weston's dad, Bruce Lee Rose, is a luthier [he makes and repairs stringed instruments]. This is significant because the ukulele and guitar you see Weston playing at shows were handcrafted by his father. They're beautiful in both sight and sound. Also, our physicist piano player [Matthew Sternberg] does an incredible Arnold Schwarzenegger impression. The significance speaks for itself.

If the band were a cartoon character, whom would it be and why?

Good Evening actually appear as the voices of the cartoon musical team know as the "Harmonicats." They are cats that are magically able to play harmonica. You can watch them every Sunday morning in David's deluded imaginings. But seriously, we would be a cross between Jesus and Bender from "Futurama."

What's the best album you've heard recently?

The Muppets' Christmas album.

What song do you never want to hear again?

With all due respect to Madonna, her version of "American Pie" could vanish from the face of the Earth and Weston would not be sorry.

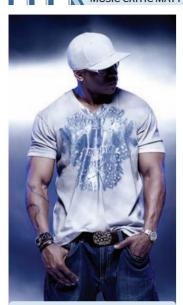

What is Chicago's best music venue and why?

The Metro. That's where Alyssa saw her first show in Chicago five years back. They always bring in great musical acts in a wide range of genres, the tickets are reasonably priced and the SmartBar is sweet too. The staff is cool. We go there often. A couple weeks ago we got to open there and discovered that the sound crew is pretty great too.

NEW RELEASES

Bon Iver

Self-titled (Jagjaguwar)

How to follow up a truly stunning record like "For Emma. Forever Ago," which topped my list of the past decade's albums for evoking such a powerful setting of frozen heartache? The answer is that Bon Iver frontman Justin Vernon has wisely opened himself and his band up to new emotional and sonic textures. Obvious or not, it must be noted that "Bon Iver," unlike its predecessor, wasn't and doesn't sound like it was recorded sad and alone in a cabin in the woods. Opener "Perth" begins softly and escalates into a full-band symphony of heaving percussion and swelling horns; the guiet "Holocene" dazzles with devastating regret atop gentle instrumentation that interacts with the sense of perspective rather than hanging back.

Vernon's lyrics are as hauntingly, poetically abstract as ever-"Open ears and open eyes/ Wake up to your starboard bride/ Who goes in and then stays inside/ Oh the demons come, they can subside" sings on "Calgary." Or how about this one. from "Minnesota. WI": "Ramble in the roots, had the marvel, moved the proof be kneeled fine's glowing/ Storing up the clues, it had its sullen blue bruised through by showing." Yet again, right down to the song titles (virtually every one is the name of a city), Bon Iver is all about a sense of place that's not necessarily physical. And once again, even when its words are unsolvable romantic puzzles, this band possesses the uncanny ability to guide you through mysterious internal terrain that feels both personal and universal. In concert: July 24 at Chicago Theatre

Cam and JT's sexy jean jam

Cameron Diaz and Justin Timberlake engage in one of the year's most awkward movie sex scenes in "Bad Teacher."

The former real-life lovebirds and sexy stars by anyone's standards engage in a fully-clothed, PG-rated romp in a hotel room.

"I've got to say that there's nothing wrong with a good jean jam," Timber-lake said with a straight face during a recent L.A. news conference supporting the film. "I'm serious. I don't know why that's funny to you guys.

"We felt, collectively, the both of us, that we had a responsibility—and that was to the young people who are going to buy tickets—to, I don't know, 'Transformers' [during] the second week [of our film], and go see this movie because they're underage. It really is a public service announcement for safe sex."

Added Diaz: "You can't 'you know' when you've got the denim on denim."

Timberlake: "Nobody ever got pregnant with their jeans on!"

Diaz: "So totally promoting that. That's pretty much the only message that's in the movie that we're proud of. ... There's nothing else. We thought we shouldn't just be making a movie about nothing that is of any importance or is like, you know, if we're going to try to be role models in any way we should offer up least a jean jam, at the very least."

HOt for teacher

Cameron Diaz trades nice for naughty—but we still can't help but love her

Los Angeles Times

After 17 years of winning over moviegoers with her long legs, breezy confidence and wide smile, one of Hollywood's consummate charmers has had enough. Cut the charisma and cue the contempt: It's time, finally, to loathe Cameron Diaz.

In "Bad Teacher," opening Friday, Diaz plays Elizabeth Halsey—an educator who steals, cheats, lies, sleeps in class, smokes pot in the school parking lot and swears like a trucker, often in red pen remarks scrawled on the work of her middle-school students. Dumped by her sugar daddy, Elizabeth's goal is to make enough money for a pair of breast implants that she thinks will help earn her the affections of another meal ticket, a teacher with a trust fund (Justin Timberlake) who's as mild as she is wild.

Thirty pages into reading the script, Diaz said, she thought she'd pass on the role. Instead, she made a conscious decision to try something new.

"I'm trained as an actor to look for a character to be someone at the end who people like. Reading this script, I was thinking, there's no way out of this for this girl," Diaz said. "She does so many things that are so selfish and narcissistic and closed off. How can she be redeemed?"

In person Diaz, 38, is perky but guarded, and fond of the word "amazing." The script? Amazing. Her co-stars? Amazing. The set? Amazing. That soy milk latte? Also apparently pretty darn good. But the indefatigably cheerful actress confesses she found a certain liberation in Elizabeth's dismal disposition.

"Her disdain for life is one that I relished playing," Diaz said. "I'm such a cheerleader, it's kind of fun to play a character who thinks everything sucks."

And then, you realize, she's doing it again: Playing rotten and R-rated, Diaz may make us like her even more. Which is exactly what "Bad Teacher" director Jake Kasdan had in mind.

"She's probably the only actress of her generation that people are actually excited to see behave this badly," Kasdan said. "It's part of her relationship with the audience at this point that she is this gorgeous woman who can do raunchy. Cameron appeals to both genders in a very real way. People just want to hang out with her."

A native of San Diego and a teenage model, Diaz came to fame in Hollywood in the '90s playing sexy but wide-eyed characters. At 21, she stepped into the first scene of "The Mask" in a slinky red dress, providing Jim Carrey with an excuse to stammer and gape and elevating the stock hot-girl role enough to earn herself a string of indie film parts.

As the high school crush who got away from Ben Stiller in "There's Something About Mary" in 1998, Diaz was the naive center of a gross-out comedy that helped pave the way for lowbrow franchises like "The Hangover" and "American Pie." In the movie's most famous scene, Mary mistakes a bodily fluid for hair gel.

"Mary, the character, the movie, was sort of innocent," Diaz said. "But Elizabeth is definitely a different kind of woman than existed in the '90s. She's driven in a different way.

Comedy is always a reflection of what we can laugh at about ourselves. Humor is really just people telling the truth. It just depends what truth needs to be told at that time."

In "Bad Teacher," Diaz speaks Elizabeth's truth by wielding her lean, 5-foot-9 body like a weapon. Commandeering the school car wash in a pair of Daisy Dukes and towering over her 12-year-old students in 4-inch stilettos and skintight pencil skirts, she is both the embodiment of the sexy teacher fantasy and a parody of it.

"Cameron knows the power of being a hot woman," Kasdan said. "She gets all of those jokes. She's like an athlete. She's got this enormous control of her physicality."

Now that Diaz has played sour, she said she won't settle for saccharine.

"When I see romantic comedies where at the end you tie it up with the happily ever after, it makes my skin crawl because I feel like you never come to a happy ending in life," Diaz said. "It's always just the next progression. That's what I liked about Elizabeth. I liked the fact that this was only one stop at the station. She didn't make it all the way. Her growth was this increment. She got that one little inch."

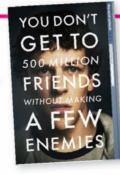

OVERALL WINNER

Justin. Sorry, Cam, his star is shining just a little bit brighter these days. You'll always have Ashton Kutcher and "What Happens In Vegas."

Cameron

Justin

Justin ... but only because "The Social Network" won Oscars. Voicing Boo Boo almost cancels that out.

Cameron

Aliens, T-Rexes and Indiana Jones

June 12 was the 30th anniversary of the opening of "Raiders of the Lost Ark," but its director, Steven Spielberg, isn't resting on his considerable laurels. He's taken over the summer movie and TV season. He is a producer of TNT's alien invasion drama "Falling Skies" (and of Fox's "Terra Nova" coming this fall). He produced three big-screen movies about aliens that are out or will be out later this summer: "Super 8," "Transformers: Dark of the Moon" and "Cowboys & Aliens." So what is his best work? Here are Spielberg's greatest cinematic achievements, including one television movie.

1. Jaws (1975)

The movie that literally invented the summer event movie category. This is the movie that scared a nation out of the ocean for a couple of decades. With the help of composer John Williams, a few musical notes have haunted the movie public for more than three decades.

2. Schindler's List

If it was possible to make Nazis look even worse than usual, this movie did it.

3. Raiders of the Lost Ark (1981) Included one of the funniest and most memorable scenes in any action movie. Faced with a superior warrior wielding a sword, Indiana Jones plays dirty and shoots the guy. Only an incredible filmmaker could have created such a heroic and likable hero that nobody thought there bringing a gun to a knife fight.

4. Close Encounters of the Third Kind (1977)

was anything wrong with

Who hasn't piled their mashed potatoes into a mountain?

5. E.T.: The Extra-Terrestrial (1982)

"Phone home" became part of the lexicon and Drew Barrymore stole every scene.

6. Saving Private Rvan (1998)

Many believe it is the best war movie ever made, and the opening D-Day landing sequence might be the most chilling ever put on film.

7. Munich (2005) An inside look at an Israeli hit team that was anything but perfect.

8. Jurassic Park (1993) Remember when you thought a Tyrannosaurus was the baddest dinosaur in the hood? Who ever heard of a Velociraptor before this movie, let alone thought they were the scariest thing since Great White sharks?

9. Duel (1971)

The lone TV movie on the list. but a pretty big clue as to the bright future of this young filmmaker. Is it possible for you to look in your rear-view mirror on the freeway and not think of this movie?

10. The Color

Purple (1985) Spielberg switched gears, and added a new color to his cravon box.

Lager than life

Chicago Tribune

If you've enjoyed a craft beer lately, it probably wasn't a lager.

There are a few reasons for that: Ales are cheaper to make (their fermentation requires less time and higher temperatures) and more robustly flavored, and their boldness is a more profound reaction to mainstream beer drinking, the vast majority of which is pale lagers (hello, Bud Light).

When the craft beer movement took root, therefore, it largely came in the form of ales. Lagers-a style developed in southern Germany in the 16th century producing a simple, smooth flavor-have largely been left behind.

The craft pendulum, however, is swinging back. Many major brewers-such as Bell's, Dogfish Head, Lagunitas, Avery and Victory—have at least one lager in their portfolio. Chicago's Metropolitan Brewing makes primarily crisp, brilliantly executed lagers.

Then there are Coney Island beers. Sensing a hole in the craft lager market, Jeremy Cowan-who had previously launched He'Brew Jewish-themed ales ("The chosen beer")started a line of robust lagers four years ago. He's up to six, plus collaborations and limitededition releases. Cowan said his lagers largely were inspired by the middling lagers some others produce.

"They're usually a brewery's least interesting beer," he said. "We're still battling the position in craft beer that lagers are boring, pale yellow fizzy beers that are interchangeable."

Cowan's lagers probably would appall 16th century Germans-who clung to a mere four ingredients, water, barley, yeast and hopswith recipes that include up to eight malts, 10 hops and ingredients such as ginger and orange peel. The approach is almost ale-like in its audaciousness and has included aging the beer in bourbon barrels and dry hopping (the process of adding aromatic hops after fermentation).

"We wanted each one of those beers to be referencing a style but with a twist," Cowan said. "We use the word lager as a point of familiarity, but once we rope them in, we turn them sideways and get them on a different track."

Yet at heart, they're still lagers, with a breadlike and yeasty nose and midtier, refreshing body. The Coney Island series, which includes a recently released summer 12-pack, has put Cowan on the leading edge of craft

On a summer day, it's tough to think of anything more satisfying.

Slacker to 'Suits'

'Suits'

9 p.m. Thursday, USA

About a year before he auditioned for USA's new lawyer drama "Suits," Patrick J. Adams was fired from an acting job.

"I don't even remember exactly when it was; I've conveniently put it right out of my head," he said, laughing. "But I was fired from a job and it stung. It goes straight to your fears and sort of confirms all of the doubts that a person has about himself."

Adams brings up the "abject misery" of the months after he got canned to demonstrate that he relates to Mike Adams, the character he now plays in "Suits." Mike is a brilliant college dropout with a photographic memory. But he's something of a slacker, making quick cash by charging people fees to take their law school entrance exams for them.

In a scene from the series premiere, Mike decides he wants to finally live up to his potential. He just has to convince high-powered Manhattan attorney Harvey Specter (Gabriel Macht) to hire him as a summer associate. Without a law degree. Or any experience.

"He needs to deal with the reality that if he wants the things that he said he always wanted, he needs to step up to the plate," Adams said. "And that moment, for me, in my own life, is totally fascinating."

Adams had to read that scene for the "dozen or so" auditions he did to get the part. The firing weighed heavy on his mind during the process, but he approached it just like Mike does.

"I was just like, 'I'm going to sit in this room and convince these producers that I need to get this job," he said. "That I'm ready for this job, that I've been kicking around for years and I'm ready for this. This is my time."

And so far so good, he said, confirming, "I haven't been fired yet."

Lower Back Pain?

Are You or Someone You Know Suffering From Lower Back Pain?

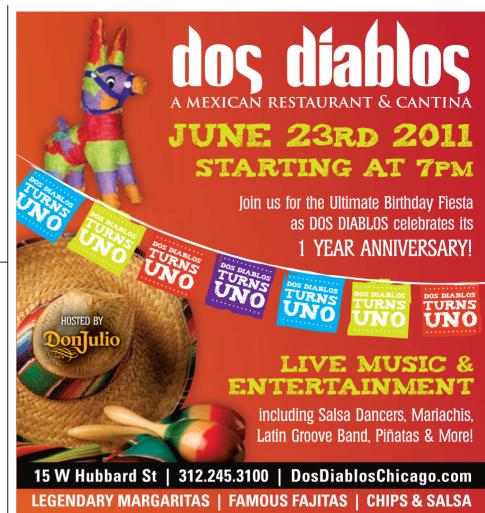

Northwestern University is seeking volunteers who have lower back pain in order to determine where the pain is recognized in the brain. Participants will also be evaluated to determine why pain goes away for some people while it remains for others. This is a 12 month study consisting of 1 visit at the Rehabilitation Institute of Chicago and 5 MRI scans at Northwestern Memorial Hospital's Olson Pavilion. All visits will take place in downtown Chicago.

Eligible participants must: • Be 18 years or older

LKSWAGEN

- Have a history of lower back pain which began 4-16 weeks ago with pain radiating into the buttocks or legs
- Be able to undergo a MRI (no pacemakers, metallic implants, or spinal implants)

Please call 312-503-3181 for more information on how you can take part in this research study.

Hangin' with Mr. Wentz

If you want to chill with Pete Wentz, you've got to be down with Wilmette. The Black Cards rocker, who hails from the North Shore suburb, talked to Spin Magazine about his favorite Chicagoland spots ahead of his August homecoming to play Lollapalooza. He names Wilmette's The Original Pancake House (aka Walker Bros.) and "greasy spoon" Chuck Wagon as two of his favorite eateries.

DIGIT

That's the number of seasons "True Blood" series creator Alan Ball hinted the show would run for, in an interview with The Hollywood Reporter. "I don't know if I have any left in me after that. We'll see. ... I think if we did 13 seasons we'd have to address why vampires are aging," he said (referring to the 13 books on which the TV show is based).

IN.

They're more than just Facebook friends. According to Us Weekly, "The Amazing Spider-Man" costars Emma Stone and Andrew Garfield—a Golden Globe nominee for his role in "The Social Network"—are dating. "They got close during filming and have been hooking up," the mag's source said. The producers are hoping it lasts at least through the Spidey sequels.

... AND OUT

There's no tying him down.
George Clooney and Elisabetta
Canalis have split after two years of couplehood, people.com reports. The couple issued a joint statement saying "it's very difficult and very personal, and we hope everyone can respect our privacy."
That doesn't include spying on Clooney with binoculars, right?
